It comes with a variety of fonts, colors, and styles that can be used as images, and even create page elements. They are the kind of friends who have been there for you through thick and thin, with advice, meal-making, ear-to-ear laughing, smiles and hugs. This goes for their spouses, too. Which is why I stand by what I said, and so will they, and their spouses. I don't want any of us to get in trouble. So, here it is. If you want to have a relationship with a Buddhist, you need to understand that you need to be OK with different lifestyles. You are free to disagree with someone about whatever they do, to any level you want. But, don't be the person who makes a huge fuss about it, and don't belittle their beliefs because you don't share them. Respect their choices, in the same way that you want to be respected. There is no way to get around this. If you aren't willing to be accepting of others' choices, then it's not going to work. Also, don't be surprised if, after they are done, you might be thinking "I get that you don't believe in X, but why did you not tell me that before?" or "How did you go from having no problem with it to now thinking that X is bad?" That's how it works for me. But for others it could be different. For some, having a friend who is Buddhist may be the only thing that makes their life look okay. They may have never thought about religion in an alternative way before, and now you have let them know that they are allowed to think about it, and that they are also allowed to have their own opinion about it. That's what friendship is. And that's all that Buddhists need to have a friend
