Google translation Functional verification (or functional testing) is a process that checks that a newly built integrated circuit (IC) works properly, as defined by the circuit specifications, before it is delivered to a customer. The process is not the same as a rigorous test in which an IC is tested while it is actively operating in a device, or in a laboratory. " Functional verification is not an easy task. By doing this we help our customers to avoid a lot of failures for their device. Regardless of what kind of devices we test, our functional verification coverage is the same: we test communication interface with its connected devices, control units, communication buses, sensors and actuators. Besides testing our devices with the corresponding software-defined radios and signal conditioning devices, we also test the electronic system with an oscilloscope, logic analyzer and cycle-accurate logic simulator. We have a very qualified and great team who makes very good steps in their right direction.
