[DNA damage in human peripheral blood lymphocytes caused by direct contact with titanium and zirconium ions]. Experiments showed that the contact of titanium (Ti) and zirconium (Zr) ions with the lymphocytes resulted in their oxidative stress as evidenced by an increase in the concentration of lipid peroxidation products. DNA damage in the exposed cells was detected by the comet assay. In the case of the Ti-contact, DNA damage appeared after a 24-h exposure while more lasting damage was detected after continuous, long-term Ti-incubation. The "Ca(2+)-dependent protease" (calpain) was activated by Ti. According to the experiments on the bimolecular interaction, the prolonged action of Zr on the lymphocytes was due to the formation of complexes of their metal ions and interleukin-8 (IL-8).

"The media coverage of the President's speech was positive, yet it was based on a few lines he spoke and some text in the speech," ECA Director General Ramin Mojallal stressed in a statement released on the 16th of February. "We have a president who is continuing the policies that we think are necessary for the country to progress," Mojallal said. The official considered President Hassan Rouhani's assertion of economic successes of the past several years and passing of last year's nuclear accord as evidence that the country is moving forward. The announcement that the country would, in fact, be keeping its 2015 nuclear deal with Iran this year, is what's really important to remember as the country faces the opportunity to climb out of the economic quagmire of sanctions and its own self-imposed isolation. "After more than a year and a half of economic sanctions, we are now in a situation where we

Effect of metal-chelating agents on toxicity of cadmium-chloride and cadmium-citrate in rats. Cadmium-chloride and cadmium-citrate were assayed for their relative toxicity in male Wistar rats.

The metal-chelating agents namely bathophenanthroline and diethyldithiocarbamate, as well as the lipid-soluble antioxidant N-acetylcysteine were administered to rats as a pretreatment 1 day prior to Cd-cloreaderallization. The changes in Cd accumulation in testes and other organs of rats exposed to Cd-chloride or Cd-citrate after the pretreatment were studied. The animals showed high Cd accumulation in the testes and other organs. The increase in accumulation was not significantly altered by either pretreatment. The changes in other organ weights and total Cd content of organs and blood are also discussed. The possible mechanism of Cd accumulation in testes is discussed.

Y\$ there are \$1\$ terms and by the Prime Power Theorem, we have $|Y| \leq \sum_{n \in R} p_n \log R$ for large enough R , where p_n are prime numbers, and the last inequality holds for R larger than a constant depending only on α . Thus the number of cubic forms f with $p_f = 1$ is bounded above by R^3 where
