NEW YORK -- Thousands of New Yorkers and tourists stopped on their way to the Brooklyn waterfront to take pictures with the Statue of Liberty on Saturday after a video of the iconic landmark appeared to be playing on it. The video showing the Lady Liberty turning on a dime appeared to have been recorded from the New York City skyline at about 6:20 p.m. Friday. The image was captured on a cellphone camera and posted on Twitter and Instagram. CBS New York reported that a police source said it appeared to be a hack on the statue. Get Breaking News Delivered to Your Inbox The NYPD and the National Park Service did not immediately respond to requests for comment. The landmark was closed from late afternoon Friday until 4:30 p.m. Saturday, the city's Parks Department said.¹

Field of the Invention This invention relates to an improved process for hydrotreating gas oils containing organic sulfur compounds and aromatic hydrocarbons to reduce the sulfur content of the oils. More particularly, it relates to an improved process in which the hydroconversion reaction is carried out in two stages, with a hydroconversion reaction zone and a hydrodesulfurization zone.

2. Description of the Prior Art Hydroconversion processes are known in the petroleum refining art for upgrading, e.g., cracking and hydrocracking, petroleum hydrocarbon oils generally characterized as being of too high boiling point to be processed by lower severity hydroprocessing and having an initial boiling point above about 400.degree. C. (750.degree. F.) and a final boiling point below about 600.degree. C. (1100.degree. F.). U.S. Pat. No. 4,122,129, issued to Cassata et al. on Oct. 24, 1978, discloses
