We experienced a case of adrenocortical carcinoma containing abundant serotonin-releasing neurons. The tumor was in the left adrenal gland and was partly pedunculated. Histologically, the tumor was composed of an adrenocortical carcinoma component and a neuroendocrine component, and abundant nerve fibers immunoreactive for serotonin were observed in the adrenocortical carcinoma component. The majority of neurons in the neuroendocrine component were immunoreactive for neuronal specific enolase, whereas all neurons in the adrenocortical carcinoma component were negative for that. Therefore, we diagnosed the tumor as adrenocortical carcinoma containing abundant serotonin-releasing neurons. A tumor may mimic an ectopic neuroblastoma and thus should be distinguished from it.

Manhattan, Kansas
Manhattan is a city in and the county seat of Doniphan County, Kansas, United States. As of the 2010 census, the city population was 57,939. History
Manhattan was founded in 1858. It was named after Manhattan, New York. In 1859, the first county courthouse was erected, and the county was incorporated that same year. A great fire in 1874 destroyed most of downtown Manhattan. The fire started in the Ellis Hotel, then quickly spread. The fire destroyed the commercial buildings on Market Street, and burned the courthouse as well. The fire raged for several hours, creating a downtown area that resembled a war-torn street for over a decade. The city's transportation needs were met by a railway station, which provided passenger and freight service for the city c6a93da74d
